The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-4, 6, 7, 10-31 and 43-57 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Zumeris (140) in view of lino.

Zumeris (140) teaches a single slab of piezoelectric material shaped as a rectangular parallelepiped, electrodes on the major surfaces, a contact region and an appropriate power supply (note, e.g. fig. 5). The drive circuit can independently either AC voltages or pulsed D.C. The pulsed voltages are varied to alter the output motion of the coupling member (see col. 7, ln 13-col. 3 ln 65). Note especially col. 7 ln., 53 and col. 8, ln 16 which explicitly teach changing the amplitude of the input voltages to control the output movement. Zumeris does not explicitly use a laminated piezo member. However lino (figs. 13 and 2) explicitly teaches using laminated sheets of piezo material to form the note lino prior art fig. 14 is the same as Zumeris fig. 7, thus lino directly teaches improving a Zumeris type structure by providing a laminated piezo body for increased output. Thus for at least this reason it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to construct Zumeris of laminated piezo sheets.

The examiner agrees with applicants carefully detailed indicates only phases are changed and not amplitudes of the drive signal, thus the same elliptical output would be obtained from any input signal. However, Zumeris clearly uses independent drive signals of various amplitudes and types to modify the motor output motion.
